You all embarked on this journey to reach this location, navigating through a narrow passage painstakingly carved out by members of Gilded Ventures. The arduous task might have spanned weeks, yet it only took our group three days to travel the rough terrain. Despite the passage of winter into spring, the air retained its chill, a reminder of the mountain's climate. Surrounded by towering peaks, it was difficult to discern the seasonal transition. Now, standing at the culmination of those gilded venture members efforts, you find yourselves at a pre-made camp, with Nahele My'runji and a few others in your company. The landscape is scattered with ruins, remnants of a forgotten era. In the far southwestern reaches of this area, nestled between the imposing mountains, lies a substantial circular structure. Time has weathered its surface, yet its sheer magnitude remains awe-inspiring, a testament to its enduring presence through the centuries.

{Game Time: Oct 26, 2023 00:04}

"Thank you all for making the journey," Nahele's voice echoed across the camp as he stepped forward, his gaze sweeping over each member gathered before him. "I understand that for some of you, this day has been long anticipated, and I appreciate your commitment. Without further delay, let's proceed." Turning his attention to two specific individuals, Nahele gestured for them to step forward. "Ezlain, Maxwell, you both have been integral to our preparations and understanding of this endeavor. Would you kindly take a moment to introduce yourselves to the group?"

[4/12/2024, 8:11:38 PM] Maxwell Rene

{Game Time: Oct 26, 2023 00:04}

"Certainly. I am Dr. Maxwell René, a Mathematician, Philosopher, and Psychiatrist recently employed by the Gilded Ventures to provide additional insights wherever possible. And you, Ezlain?"

[4/12/2024, 8:14:36 PM] Archivist Ezlain

Ezlain steps forwards, grasping his hands together behind his back as he turns to the group "I am Ezlain, I have no family name I identify with so just Ezlain is fine with addressing me. I am Gilded Ventures new Chronicler and archivist." His expression cold and rigid

"Thank you, Ezlain and Maxwell, for stepping forward," Nahele acknowledged with a nod of gratitude. "I had them introduce themselves because they will be leading our two teams this evening. Tonili and Nythrim, you'll accompany Maxwell, while Ezlain, you'll work with Khalil. Please gather in your respective groups, take some time to discuss among yourselves, and decide where you'd like to begin." With those instructions given, Nahele indicated for the groups to form and begin their discussions. "I'll remain here at camp," he continued, "to oversee the setup for our longer stay. There are still a few crates to unpack and organize."

A few of you already know me, Tonili or Toni My'runji. I am here to assist and learn with everyone about the area. I am normally found assisting Lady Kimura with Phoenix Antiquities. Though out here just an ordinary and curious adventurer. Oh and of course, sister to our esteemed guide tonight." winking toward Nahele she offered that little sister sass.

Upon closer inspection of the structure, your gaze is drawn to the upper right corner where the remnants of a wall stand tall against the test of time. Amidst the weathered stones, you notice the faint outline of what appears to be a chimney, partially collapsed yet still discernible. However, what catches your attention is the absence of its base, as if it had been removed or eroded over time.

Carefully sifting through the earth within the confines of the ruined foundation, your fingers brush against the tangled vegetation and loose soil. Amidst the debris, your hand closes around something solid. Pulling it free, you unearth a small trinket, its surface weathered by time yet still retaining a hint of mystique. Examining the object closely, you find it to be a stone circle, roughly hewn and worn smooth by the passage of years. Etched upon its surface is a sigil depicting a lunar cycle, with a large circle at the center representing the full moon. The intricate details of the lunar phases are delicately impressed upon the stone, hinting at a deeper significance. Curiously, the trinket is not tethered to any cord or chain, leaving its purpose open to interpretation.

Running your fingers over the impression on the ground, a sense of familiarity washes over you, reminiscent of countless tracking endeavors in your past. The smooth indentation suggests more than just a random anomaly; it hints at a deliberate action, a purposeful disturbance in the earth. Drawing upon your experience, you consider the possibilities. Could this indentation mark the spot where something once stood—a post, a pillar, or perhaps even a structure? The surrounding terrain bears signs of disturbance, hinting at a sudden collapse or filling in of a void. It's as if the ground itself conspired to conceal whatever lay beneath, shrouding it in mystery. As you ponder the implications, your instincts as a tracker kick in, urging you to delve deeper into the enigma before you. Whatever lay hidden beneath the surface, it holds the key to unlocking the secrets of this ancient site.

"What luck!" they exclaimed, turning toward Tonili and Maxwell. "Come look at this." They held out the object to be examined: A stone circle, roughly hewn and worn smooth by the passage of years. With each stroke, the intricate details of the ancient stonework come into sharper focus, painting a vivid picture of craftsmanship long forgotten. However, your efforts unwittingly disturb the delicate balance of the structure. With a sudden movement, a brick dislodges from its precarious perch, tumbling inward and disappearing behind the wall. Your heart skips a beat as you watch it vanish from sight, a momentary lapse in the tranquility of the scene. For a few agonizing seconds, there is only silence, broken only by the sound of your own heartbeat echoing in your ears. Then, just as you begin to wonder about the consequences of your actions, a distant crash reverberates through the air, as if in delayed response to the brick's descent.

As she wrote down her observation of the indent, she would speak up only after Nythrim had entered the conversation. Swiftly and silently Tonili rose from her crouch to move over toward Nythrim to inspect the item she had found. "I wonder... over where I was there was possibly something that had over time sunken into the ground and has been concealed for a while. I wonder if they would go together if it was a ceremonial something or other. It sort of reminds me of our Festival of Light etchings. But still different."

Kneeling down beside the impression in the ground, you scrutinize it with a critical eye. The more you inspect it, the clearer it becomes that this is not a deliberate marker or indication of something once present. Instead, the evidence points to a different conclusion: this section of the structure experienced some form of collapse or subsidence. Traces of soil and debris surrounding the indentation suggest a sudden shift in the ground, as if it gave way under some significant force. The disturbed earth offers no clues of past occupancy or deliberate placement; instead, it tells a tale of upheaval and change.

If it is the latter, that would provide plenty of insight towards the ruined state of this structure."

Toni spoke through soft huffs of breath as she slowly and meticulously continued to excavate a small area around her. Marking out and drawing the impressions she sat back on her heels and showed it to Maxwell. Looking at the crowbar then at the two others in the group she paused to see if Nythrim would like to do the honors or if she should. Thinking to herself that she might be the strongest of the three, she did not assume

They exchanged a look with Tonili, then made an obliging gesture, wordlessly signaling that she ought to be the one to take it."With such a tool, the best I can do is make you both laugh," they remarked lightly.

As their Game Master, you observe their cautious movements with a keen eye, noting the fragile state of the structure revealed by their actions. It becomes evident that years of neglect and lack of maintenance have taken their toll, leaving the edifice vulnerable to the slightest provocation. Nahele My'runji addressed each member of the team with a mix of appreciation and invitation. "I know your answer, Ezlain," he began, acknowledging their ongoing commitment. "But Khalil, would you like to come back from time to time and assist us here? Of course, you don't have to, considering your role as the Ward of Lady Kimura and your other responsibilities." His gaze then turned to the approaching figures. "I extend that offer to you as well, Sister, as you seem to have found something truly 'epic' " he continued, addressing another member of the team. "And Nythrim, Maxwell, do you both plan to visit this site occasionally?" Nahele's tone was welcoming, as he'd finish his statement.

Khalil Valure returned his attention to Nahele, giving the man a nod. "When I have some spare time, I'm happy to assist and explore. How often that will happen is the question."

{Game Time: Oct 26, 2023 00:04}

"As much as I can," they replied to Nahele. "I can stand by for medical assistance at least. You have many strong and intelligent people here already," they said, gesturing to Tonili and Maxwell in turn.

Nahele My'runji nod conveyed a sense of agreement as he elaborated on the arrangements. "The tent is all set up with several cots, so please feel free to spend the evening here," he suggested warmly. "Let's have a good meal together. Perhaps my sister can whip something up for us using the supplies we brought." He paused, ensuring his words were clear. "I'm not suggesting this just because she's the only female here," he clarified with a smile. "She genuinely cooks quite well, and it would be a treat to have a taste of home brought to all of you." Turning his attention to Nythrim, he continued, "And Nythrim, your expertise would be invaluable here. I'm certain there's a significant level of risk involved in what we're about to undertake, and having your services would greatly enhance our safety and success." Nahele's tone conveyed both appreciation for their presence and a genuine desire to collaborate effectively as a team.

Tonili My'runji grin grew hearing both Ezlain and Nythrim. "You both understand me! This exploration is much of what I did growing up in the mountains. though mostly in caves. But the foraging was wonderful as well. Nythrim you and I should collaborate some time in the things we forage and findings in the different areas."

Hearing Nythrim, Toni joyfully gestured for Nythrim to join her, if they wanted, while she cooked. Finding the provisions box she inspected the items. As she formulated a meal she prepared the cooking fires. Water poured into a kettle then put over one of the fires to heat up. The larger fire she placed a large flat stone to let it heat up while she combined ingredients. (meal will be described in more detail at a later time)
